The topic of rights and informed consent is important because many individuals today are being subjected to harmful psychiatric interventions not of their own choosing, either in psychiatric facilities or in the community. They are not given choices or alternatives. Many are under court ordered 'treatment' and they risk going back to the hospital or even jail if they do not comply. Others are at risk of losing important social supports if they are not 'treatment compliant.' Join us to discuss the important things we can do to protect our rights today and in the future

Three presenters, Jim Gottstein, Ron Bassman, and Sarah Smith will share how their lives were impacted by lack of choices in the mental health system and how this led them to their current life's work which is to promote human rights in the mental health system.
